

ABSTRACT

The present invention relates to a method of statistical synthesis and analysis of historical data. More specifically, embodiments of the present invention describe a process by which a series of data or indices is generated from a set of historical data, 5 which summarize the statistical characteristics of the historical data and which are used in conjunction with other statistical methods to estimate future trends based on the historical data.